Surely the famed cooking of Germany, | and they drank 1898 Chateau Coutet wine is found in St. Louis, has been pervert- to what their appetites for the good things

Next they toyed with "consomme Chesterfield," which was served in delicate Berman dinner that was served by Doctor china bowls that looked like eggshells, and they ate a dry sherry ice.

Then they ate "supreme de truite"-nice mountain brook trout, bol'ed and served with a mushroom sauce. The waiters brought it in on silver platters and served each guest, while it was piping hot, and if stroles where culinary excellence and the guest did the proper thing and com-sleasing and extertaining surroundings are menced eating it as soon as it was on his nost admired. Doctor Lewald announced plate he ste of such fish as he never to his guests that it was his desire to tasted before. With this rare dish of fish

The enjoyment of the dinner was the speculation of the guests as to what they would be treated to next. It isn't polite to do this, but when you are experiencing a new sensation you sometimes cannot help but speculate. They were not kept secause complaining is impossible to a in suspense very long, for the waiters entered carrying huge silver platters of "Baron d'Agneau de lais aus Primeurs"two roasted lambs. They were whole and standing on their four feet.

and standing on their four feet.

The guests gasped in surprise and Doctor Lewald, who is an expert carver, immediately began the slaughter. With the lamb were served all the fresh vegetables of the season. The wine was 1833 Chateau Haute Brion Larrivat. The diners present pronounced it the best mutton they ever tasted, and some of them asked for a second helping. second helping.

"Mignons de Poulets au Herbs," was the next surprise. This was the broiled breasts of spring chickens served with fine herbs, and they called for 1893 Johannesberger, or at least that is what the guests received.

Next followed the "Sorbet au Peach Brandy" and cigarettes. Peach-brandy punch and cigarettes. This was to give the guests a resting spell, and let them talk and become better acquainted.

The mellow wine had had its effect, as wines will on a congenial dinner party, and they talked ami offered toasts to the host, to his Emperor and to his country. The bond between America and Germany was greatly strengthened at that dinner, for the molders of public opinion were well fed, well contented and at peace with the whole world and themselves.

"Canetons flanques de Becassines" and "salade sorrette" were served after the cigarettes and the peach-brandy punch. Roast duck flanked with the breasts of snowbirds, served with lettuce salad and 1885 Chambertin Burgunder.

Next they are "asperges Nouvelles Chantilly"-asparagus tips served with Chantilly sauce, and with this they sipped

"Parfait de foie gras Strausburg style" goose liver paste-a delicacy few of them had ever had the pleasure of eating, but they all pronounced it fine.

"Surprise glacee al Orientale." This was, indeed, the surprise of the evening, and it was much admired before its beauty was destroyed. The surprise was a reproduction of the Chinese Pavillon and a miniature statue of Prince Pu Lun in ices.

The surprise was followed by coffee, cheese, cigars and German beer. The guests departed declaring that it was the finest dinner, served in the best style of any feast that they had ever attended. Since then the wonders of the German cuisine have been the theme upon which they have dwelt. Their wives and mothers can no longer cook to please them.
